Fill In The Blanks In The Sentences Below Using Appropriate Conjunction: Tom Brought A Puppy _____

Understanding how to correctly use conjunctions to complete sentences is essential for clear and effective communication. Conjunctions serve as connectors that join words, phrases, or clauses, enabling smooth and coherent expression of ideas. In this article, we will explore various types of conjunctions, their usage, and how to accurately fill in the blanks in sentences like "Tom brought a puppy _____". Through detailed explanations, examples, and tips, you'll learn to choose the most appropriate conjunctions to enhance your writing and speaking skills.

What Are Conjunctions?

Conjunctions are words that link different parts of a sentence together. They help in expressing relationships such as addition, contrast, choice, cause-and-effect, and sequence. There are three main types of conjunctions:

- Coordinating Conjunctions: Connect words, phrases, or independent clauses of equal importance. Examples include and, but, or, nor, for, so, yet.
- Subordinating Conjunctions: Link dependent clauses to independent clauses, showing relationships like cause, condition, or time. Examples include because, although, since, unless, when, while.
- Correlative Conjunctions: Pairs of words used together to connect equal elements. Examples include both/and, either/or, neither/nor, not only/but also.

Understanding the Sentence Structure

The sentence "Tom brought a puppy _____" is incomplete. The blank requires a conjunction that logically connects the first part of the sentence to an additional idea or clause. Depending on the context, different conjunctions can be used to complete this sentence appropriately.

Examples with Different Conjunctions

- Tom brought a puppy because he loves dogs.
- Tom brought a puppy and he took it for a walk.
