Selecting Your First, Second, and Third Choices: A Strategic Approach

Choosing the right classes involves more than just picking what sounds interesting. It requires evaluating your current skill level, artistic interests, and future goals.

Step 1: Assess Your Skill Level and Experience

Begin by honestly evaluating your artistic skills and previous experience:

- Beginner: Just starting out; classes focusing on foundational skills like drawing basics, color theory, or introductory painting.
- Intermediate: Have some experience; look for classes that challenge your skills and introduce new techniques.
- Advanced: Skilled artists seeking specialized instruction or advanced techniques, such as figure drawing, mixed media, or digital art.

Matching your skill level with class offerings ensures a productive and enjoyable experience.

Step 2: Identify Your Artistic Interests and Goals

Determine what you hope to gain from the summer program:

- Skill Development: Improving technical abilities.
- Exploration: Trying new mediums or styles.
- Portfolio Building: Creating work for college or professional applications.
- Enjoyment and Relaxation: Engaging in art for personal satisfaction.

Clarifying your goals helps in selecting classes that align with your aspirations.

Obtain the full list of summer art classes, which might include:

- Drawing Fundamentals
- Painting Techniques
- Digital Illustration
- Sculpture and Ceramics
- Mixed Media Art

Examine the course descriptions, schedules, prerequisites, and instructor expertise. Cross-reference this information with your assessment to determine your top three choices.
