

VII. Find And Correct One Mistake In Each Sentence. 1. The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out.

VII. Find And Correct One Mistake In Each Sentence. 1. The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out.

Introduction to Sentence Correction and Its Importance

Mastering the skill of identifying and correcting grammatical errors in sentences is a vital aspect of enhancing your English language proficiency. Whether you're preparing for competitive exams, improving your professional communication, or aiming to write more clearly, understanding how to spot mistakes and correct them is essential. This article will focus on a specific sentence: "The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out," analyzing the grammatical mistake it contains, explaining why it is incorrect, and providing correct alternatives.

By engaging with this exercise, you will develop a keen eye for common errors, learn the rules behind proper sentence construction, and improve your overall language accuracy. Let's begin by examining the sentence in question.

Understanding the Sentence and Its Context

Original Sentence:

The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out.

Intended Meaning:

The sentence aims to express that the weather was so cold that the speaker chose not to go outside.

Initial Observations:

- The sentence attempts to describe the intensity of the cold weather.
- It uses the phrase "such Cold" to emphasize the degree of coldness.
- The sentence structure resembles a comparative or emphasizing construction.

Identifying the Mistake in the Sentence

What Is Wrong with the Sentence?

The main grammatical mistake in this sentence lies in the phrase "such Cold." In English, when using "such" to emphasize an adjective, the correct structure is:

- "such" + (determiner) + adjective + noun
- Or "such" + adjective + noun (if "noun" follows)

However, in the sentence, "Cold" is an adjective, and "such" is used directly before it as if "Cold" were a noun. This is incorrect because "Cold" as an adjective cannot be preceded directly by "such" without the appropriate determiner.

Specific Issue:

- Incorrect: "such Cold"
- Correct: "such cold" or "such a cold"

The mistake is that "Cold" is capitalized and used incorrectly with "such." Additionally, standard grammar rules specify that when using "such" before an adjective, the adjective should be in lowercase, and the phrase should be structured properly.

Correcting the Sentence

Option 1: Using "such" + adjective + noun

- Since "cold" is an adjective, to use "such," it should be followed by a noun phrase, such as "a cold day" or "cold weather."

- Corrected sentence:

"The weather was such a cold day that I didn't go out."

or

"The weather was such cold weather that I didn't go out."

Option 2: Using "such" + adjective + noun (more natural)

- More naturally, the sentence can be rephrased as:

"The weather was so cold that I didn't go out."

- This version uses "so" instead of "such," which is more common when emphasizing adjectives.

Option 3: Using "such" + noun phrase

- For a more formal or emphatic tone, the sentence can be: "The weather was such that it was very cold, so I didn't go out."

Choosing the Best Correction

Among the options, the most straightforward correction involves replacing "such Cold" with "so cold," which is idiomatic and grammatically correct.

Corrected sentence:

The weather was so cold that I didn't go out.

This version maintains the original meaning, improves grammatical correctness, and aligns with common usage.

Additional Tips for Sentence Correction

Understanding "Such" and "So" Usage

- "Such" is used before a noun or noun phrase to emphasize qualities or characteristics.
- Example: "It was such a beautiful day."
- "So" is used before adjectives or adverbs for emphasis.
- Example: "It was so cold."

Common Mistakes to Avoid

- Using "such" directly before an adjective without a noun or noun phrase.
- Capitalizing words unnecessarily unless they are proper nouns or at the beginning of a sentence.
- Misplacing modifiers which can alter the meaning or make the sentence grammatically incorrect.

Examples of Correct Usage

- Correct: "It was such a beautiful sunset."
- Correct: "It was so cold that I stayed indoors."
- Incorrect: "It was such cold that I stayed indoors."

Additional Examples and Practice

Example 1

- Incorrect: "He has such Good ideas."
- Correct: "He has such good ideas."
- Explanation: "such" should be followed by a noun or a noun phrase, and adjectives should be lowercase unless starting a sentence.

Example 2

- Incorrect: "The movie was such interesting."
- Correct: "The movie was so interesting."
- Explanation: Use "so" before adjectives to emphasize.

Example 3

- Incorrect: "She is such intelligent."
- Correct: "She is so intelligent."

Summary and Key Takeaways

- The main mistake in the sentence "The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out" is the incorrect use of "such" before the adjective "Cold."
- The correct ways to express emphasis include using "so" with adjectives or "such" with noun phrases.
- For the original sentence, the most natural correction is: "The weather was so cold that I didn't go out."
- Always remember to match "such" with nouns and "so" with adjectives for grammatical correctness.

- Proper capitalization and sentence structure are essential for clarity and correctness.

Conclusion

Identifying and correcting grammatical mistakes in sentences is an invaluable skill that enhances both written and spoken communication. In the case of the sentence "The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out," the error revolves around the misuse of "such" with an adjective. By understanding the rules governing "such" and "so," and practicing these corrections in various contexts, learners can significantly improve their language accuracy.

Remember, always review your sentences for proper structure, correct adjective and noun pairing, and appropriate emphasis markers. With consistent practice, you'll become proficient at spotting and fixing such errors, leading to clearer, more effective communication.

Happy learning!

Frequently Asked Questions

What is the mistake in the sentence 'The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out'?

The word 'Such' should be replaced with 'so' to correctly express the degree of cold: 'The weather was so cold that I didn't go out.'

How should the sentence 'The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out' be corrected?

Change 'Such' to 'so' to form the correct sentence: 'The weather was so cold that I didn't go out.'

Why is 'Such' incorrect in the sentence, and what is the correct word to use?

'Such' is incorrect because it needs a noun following it; the correct word is 'so,' which is used with adjectives like 'cold' to indicate degree.

What grammatical correction is needed in the sentence regarding the phrase 'Such Cold'?

Replace 'Such Cold' with 'so cold' to correctly describe the temperature: 'The weather was so cold...'.

Can you provide the corrected version of the sentence 'The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out'?

Yes, the corrected sentence is: 'The weather was so cold that I didn't go out.'

Additional Resources

Find And Correct One Mistake In Each Sentence is a fundamental exercise in mastering English grammar and sentence structure. It challenges learners to identify errors and improve their writing clarity and correctness. This skill is especially crucial in academic, professional, and everyday communication, where precision impacts understanding and credibility. In this guide, we will analyze the sentence: "The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out."—breaking down the mistake, explaining the grammatical rules involved, and providing a corrected version. This approach not only helps in fixing this specific sentence but also enhances your overall grammatical awareness.

Understanding the Importance of Correct Sentence Structure

Before diving into the correction, let's understand why identifying and fixing mistakes in sentences matters:

- Clarity: Proper grammar ensures your message is clear and easily understood.
- Professionalism: Well-constructed sentences reflect positively on your language skills.
- Learning Progress: Spotting errors reinforces your understanding of grammatical rules.
- Effective Communication: Accurate sentences prevent misinterpretation.

Analyzing the Sentence: "The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out."

The Sentence in Context

This sentence aims to convey that the weather was extremely cold, which prevented the speaker from going out. However, there's a grammatical mistake that affects the sentence's correctness and natural flow.

Step 1: Identifying the Mistake

The key issue lies in the phrase "Such Cold". In English, the phrase "such" is an intensifier used before a noun preceded by an adjective (e.g., such a big house). Here, "cold" is an adjective, but it is not preceded by "a" or another determiner, and "such" is not correctly used with an adjective alone.

Step 2: Explaining the Mistake

- Incorrect usage: "such cold"
- Correct usage: "such a cold"

Why?

"Such" functions as an intensifier that typically modifies a noun phrase. When used with an adjective, it usually appears in the form "such a" + adjective + noun. For example:

- Such a beautiful day
- Such an interesting book

In the phrase "such cold", the correct structure should be "such a cold", where "cold" is a noun derived from the adjective, and "a" is the indefinite article.

Step 3: Corrected Sentence

The corrected version of the sentence is:

"The weather was such a cold that I didn't go out."

Alternatively, a more natural phrasing would be:

"The weather was so cold that I didn't go out."

This introduces a different grammatical structure, using "so" with an adjective, which is more common in everyday speech.

Deep Dive into the Correct Usage of "Such" and "So"

When to Use "Such"

"Such" is used to emphasize a noun or noun phrase, often paired with "a" or "an".

Examples:

- Such a beautiful sunset
- Such an interesting story
- Such a difficult problem

Rules for "Such":

- Use "such" before "a" + adjective + noun.
- Alternatively, "such" can be used before "the" + adjective + noun.

When to Use "So"

"So" is used to intensify adjectives or adverbs directly, without a noun.

Examples:

- The weather was so cold.
- She was so tired.
- It was so hot outside.

Comparative Table

Usage	Structure	Example
Using "such"	Such + a/an + adjective + noun	Such a challenging task
Using "so"	So + adjective/adverb	So cold, so quickly

Additional Tips for Correct Sentence Construction

- Ensure subject-verb agreement: The subject "weather" is singular, so the verb "was" is correct.
- Appropriate use of articles: When using "such" before an adjective, always include "a" or "an" before the noun.
- Natural phrasing: Sometimes, "so" is more natural than "such a" for expressing intensity.

Practice Exercises

1. Correct the mistake: "He is Such a talented musician."
- Corrected: "He is such a talented musician."
(No article needed before "such" when it is used as a determiner directly before the adjective + noun phrase.)

2. Correct the mistake: "It was Such hot day yesterday."

- Corrected: "It was such a hot day yesterday."

3. Rewrite using "so": "The water was Such cold that I couldn't swim."

- Corrected: "The water was so cold that I couldn't swim."

Summary

In the sentence "The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out," the core mistake was the incorrect pairing of "such" with an adjective "cold" without the necessary "a". The correct formulations are:

- "The weather was such a cold day that I didn't go out."

- Or, more naturally, "The weather was so cold that I didn't go out."

Understanding the proper usage of "such" and "so" enhances your ability to craft grammatically correct and expressive sentences.

Final Thoughts

Mastering the art of finding and correcting mistakes in sentences is an essential step toward fluency. It involves not only recognizing errors but also understanding the underlying grammatical rules. By practicing with sentences like "The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn't Go Out," you develop a keener eye for detail and improve your overall language proficiency. Remember, attention to grammatical nuances transforms your writing from good to excellent, making your communication more effective and professional.

Keep practicing by analyzing sentences, identifying errors, and applying the correct grammatical structures. Over time, this will become second nature, and you'll be able to communicate with greater clarity and confidence.

Vii Find And Correct One Mistake In Each Sentence 1 The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn T Go Out

Vii Find And Correct One Mistake In Each Sentence 1 The Weather Was Such Cold That I Didn T Go Out

Related Articles

- Wireless Local Area Networks Are Used By Physicians And Nurses To:A\) Access Bank Accounts For Patients
- 80 N And 60 N Force Act Concurrently On A Point. Find Magnitude Of The Vector Sum If The Forces Pull-in
- A 65.0-kg Man Is Sliding Across His Kitchen Floor. Between Socks And Polished Hardwood, The Coefficient

Back to Home