I [stay] there for three weeks, and I [explore] the cities thoroughly. After that, I [attend] a language course in Madrid, which [start] early July. I promise I [send] you lots of photos."

Step-by-step Explanation:

1. "Next month, I [go]" - Use "am going to go" for planned intention.
2. "I [visit]" - Since it's a planned trip, "will visit" is appropriate.
3. "I [stay]" - Scheduled stay, so "will stay" or "am staying" could work.
4. "I [explore]" - Future intention, so "will explore".
5. "After that, I [attend]" - Fixed arrangement, use "will attend".

- Be aware of formal vs. informal contexts: For personal letters, contractions like "I'll" or "I'm going to" are common.

Common Mistakes to Avoid

- Confusing "will" and "be going to": Remember, "will" often expresses spontaneous decisions or predictions, while "be going to" indicates prior plans.
- Mixing present and future tenses incorrectly: Use present continuous or simple present only when referring to scheduled events.
- Ignoring time clues: Always consider the time expressions to select the correct tense.
